

CAMERON COUNTY COURTHOUSE

BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS

The historic Cameron County Courthouse in Brownsville, now known as the Dancy Building, was constructed in 1912 and operated as the center of county government until 1979. Eleven years after the completion of a 2001 exterior restoration, certain building elements began showing signs of advanced deterioration. A historical architectural firm was brought in to complete an initial conditions assessment in of the wood windows, terra cotta cladding, and roof, followed by a complete set of construction documents in 2013 for the repair and restoration of these elements to safeguard the historical features of this Neoclassical landmark. United's scope include terra cotta replacement, steel lintel replacement, terra cotta spall and crack repairs, tuckpointing and terra cotta glazing.
